Not long ago such talk would have been dismissed as the rantings of crazed environmentalists. Florida, after all, has long been a land of go-go growth, a real estate developer's paradise.

But events in the last five years have spotlighted the fragile nature of the Florida environment. Nature and manity almost appear to be conspiring against the promised land

In recent months alone, for example, the following A record-breaking January cold snap, called "the freeze of the century" by the state agriculture commis-

In 1975, the Florida legislature required local governments to devise growth plans. But The Orlando Sentinel reported in December that an examination of 500 land-use changes in Orange and Seminole counties "shows a pattern of concessions to developers and an absence of long-range planning."

Other states were settled by immigrants seeking land, gold or religious freedom. In Florida's past, land developers played the key roles. The state's modern history began in the 1880s with resort developments by two wealthy railroad men, Henry M. Flagler and Henry M. Plagler and Menry was a small constal village until Henry B. Florida has taken several major steps to protect its environment in recent years. In 1983, it passed a water quality act that created a $100-million trust fund to help local governments finance sewage-treatment plans. In 1984, it passed a wetlands protection act, giving the state greater jurisdiction over swamps, marshes and flood-plain development.

The legislature is also scheduled to consider a broadly worded state plan that sets some controversial goals. Among other things, the document recommends that the state funnel 85 percent of its future population growth into existing urban areas; purchase 100 miles of new public beaches; halt destruction of wetlands; build a high-speed rail system linking Tampa

Since then, The New York Times reports, Mr. Ross has ended up eating his words, so to speak, having become a much sought-after authority on blueberry muffins. He has been asked to judge them, sample them and even cook up a batch.

budget process off to an early start.

The letters to Mr. Dole and Mr. Domenici represent the first efforts by committee chairmen to reach this goal. They illustrate basic agreement on the need to reduce the deficit but not necessarily in the ways proposed by the president.

Senate Republican leaders said last week that they would propose eliminating the 1986 cost-of-living adjustments in many benefit programs, including Social Security. Republicans hold 53 of the 100 Senate seats, and the Senate committee chairmen are all Republi-

The main responsibility for the budget has fallen to Senate Republicans at this stage because the House of Representatives wants the Senate to take the first action on the budget. Democrats insist that the Republicans take the lead.

The Budget Committee recomentire government and for specific activities such as the military, education, health and agriculture. The recommendations guide Congress when it votes on appropriation bills later in the year.

Republicans on the Senate Finance Committee have prepared a detailed list of legislative proposals that could, over the next three years, save $63.3 billion in programs under the committee's jurisdiction. The programs include Social Security and Medicare and Medicaid, the health programs for 30 million elderly and 22 million low-income people.

Senator Lowell P. Weicker Jr. of Connecticut, chairman of the Committee on Small Business, and Senator Dale Bumpers of Arkansas the committee's ranking Democrat have introduced a bill that would reduce the Small Business Administration's $726-million budget by more than 35 percent next year.

But Mr. Weicker adamantly opposed the president's proposal to abolish the agency and members of the Budget Committee said they would not adopt it.

The Reagan administration's "shortsighted effort to abolish SBA makes no sense," Mr. Weicker said in his letter. "It would eliminate the only agency in the executive branch whose sole mission is to promote and assist the nation's 14 million small businesses."

The White House contends that most small businesses do not require the agency's assistance. Da-vid A. Stockman, director of the Office of Management and Budget. said last week that the Small Busi-

His committee supervises that program, and his position makes it unlikely that the Senate will seek to abolish it, according to members of the Budget Committee. Several other conservative Republicans cal year 1986, which begins Oct. 1, have joined Democrats in defendthe attention has shifted to Capitol ing the Job Corps.

Senator Robert T. Stafford of Vermont, chairman of the Labor and Human Resources Subcommittee on Education, has forcefully rejected the president's proposal to students from families with adjusted gross income of more than $32,500 a year. He also criticized Mr. Reagan's proposal to establish a $4,000 annual limit on all types of federal aid, including grants and loans, for any one student.

Senator Bob Packwood of Oregon, chairman of the Finance Committee, said in a letter to Mr. Domenici that "we will meet our responsibility for achieving $63.3 billion of spending cuts over the three fiscal years in question, if all other major committees" agree to meet the cuts required of them.

In his letter, Mr. Packwood did not specify how the savings would be achieved. But details of the proposals were obtained from members of the committee.

By far the biggest item on the list was the omission of the 1986 cost-of-living increase for 36 million Social Security beneficiaries. The committee estimated that that would save $5.9 billion in the fiscal year 1986 and a total of $22.5 billion in 1986-88, assuming the annual adjustments resume in 1987.

The list includes these proposals: Freezing Medicare payment rates for hospitals in 1986 at 1985

MOSCOW — Last fall, when the world chess championship in Moscow was in its early days, an article appeared in a newspaper for Com-munist youth about the value of the game for young minds.

chess at school, using boards they made themselves in woodwork classes, taught sometimes by their parents in the absence of qualified coaches. This, concluded the author, is all for the good.

"Chess lessons help children to study better," it said, because "it encourages a firmness of character, agility of mind and a quick and logical intellect."

Friday's performance at the Hotel Sport, starring a haggard world champion and a defiant challenger, revealed another side of chess.

The world championship match between the champion, Anatoli Karpov, and Gary Kasparov was ended after a five-month marathon in circumstances that one chess specialist described simply as

In the view of some analysts, the struggle over the championship match was also a reflection of the tenacity of the Soviet chess establishment, and its loyalty to Mr. Karpov, the man who has kept the title of world champion under the Soviet flag since 1975, by fending off a challenge from Viktor Korchnoi, a Soviet defector, in 1978 and

From around the world, expert opinion has held that the decision by the International Chess Federation president, Florencio Campomanes of the Philippines, to cancel the match and start again at 0-0 favors Mr. Karpov.

While still ahead, 5-3, with one victory needed to retain his title, the champion had visibly weakened under the strain of the match, losing more than 22 pounds (10 kilograms) and failing to win a game since Nov. 24

The major reason for the prolonged match, which included a record 40 draws, was the scoring sys-tem. In previous championship tournaments, a victory counted one point and a half point was awarded for a draw; but in this match nothing was given for draws.
While the news of Friday's

The match was annulled by the president for the good of the two players, for the good of chess, a new match will be held after a meeting of the chess federation in August. That was the extent of the story on the back page of the Communist daily newspaper Pravda.

The Soviet press agency Tass elaborated Saturday on the reasons for the decision and quoted the chief arbiter of the match. Svetozar Gligoric of Yugoslavia, as saying that Mr. Campomanes's decision was "absolutely justifiable."

"I believe Karpov and Kasparov are really very tired," Tass quoted Mr. Gligoric as saying, adding that this was quite understandable "after such a marathon 'battle,'

However, Mr. Kasparov, at 21 the youngest man ever to play in a world championship, appeared perfectly fit Friday as he made an appeal to keep playing.

Of the three arbiters of the match, Mr. Gligoric was the only non-Soviet citizen and, according to chess experts, his consent to the Campomanes decision has out-raged chess circles in Yugoslavia.

For die-hard fans, particularly those backing Mr. Kasparov, the official explanation was not sufficient, although they too had to admit that they had grown weary of

The Russian love of chess is an old story. But in the Soviet Union, the game's popular appeal has spread beyond those of Russian nationality. In Armenia, there is a chess school named after Tigran Petrosian, that Soviet republic's native world champion. Mr. Kasparov received his early training in the republic of Azerbaijan, although he is half Armenian, half Jewish.

For Soviet officialdom, chess has become a matter of national honor. The same is true of other sports and can go on the world stage and carry off international prizes.

Chess, being in some ways a Soviet national pastime, has long had a special political dimension. Since 1927, the men's world title has stayed in Soviet hands with only two lapses — in the 1930s when Max Euwe of the Netherlands held it for three years and from 1972 to 1975 when the brilliant but erratic American, Bobby Fischer, reigned.

Mr. Fischer earned a special place in Soviet chess memory. On the wall of the game room at the Moscow Chess Club, his is the only picture of a non-Soviet citizen. He is also the idol of Mr. Kasparov, who is said to share his bold, attacking style.

Since Mr. Fischer's days, some here say that Soviet determination to hold the crown has only grown. The challenge to Mr. Karpov by Mr. Korchnoi, a defector, elevated the struggle, turning Mr. Karpov into something of a national hero, an upholder of the Soviet way against a man viewed as a traitor.

This year's match, between two Soviet citizens, both of whom are members of the Communist Party, had at first seemed dull compared to the fireworks of the Karpov-Korchnoi battles or, before that, the face-off between Mr. Fischer and Boris Spassky.

But even with both players playing under the same flag, high emotions - and some say politics, albein the arts: The Soviet system is it of a different sort - again

Chess Experts Are Critical Of Cancellation of Match

LONDON -- Several international chess grandmasters, including a former president of the ruling body of chess, have criticized the cancellation of the world championship match and accused the Russians of engineering the move.

A Soviet defector and grandmaster, Viktor Korchnoi, said the Soviet chess authorities wanted the championship match, the longest in history, halted to ensure that the champion, Anatoli Karpov, an ardent Communist, was not beaten by his challenger, Gary Kasparov. When the match was halted, the score was 5-3 in Mr. Karpov's favor. Although Mr. Karpov needed only one more victory to retain his title. Mr. Kasparov had won the two most recent games. Mr. Korchnoi told The Associated Press in Geneva that the president of the International Chess Federation, Florencio Campomanes, a Filipino, who announced the decision, was a "scapegoat" for Korchnoi, who now lives in Switzerland. "According to me, Kasparov won the match. It is clear he was villing to continue the match, while Karpov needed a break."

World-class players at a competition in the Icelandic capital, Reykjavik, were also skeptical. A former federation president, Fridrik Olafsson of Iceland, said he regarded Mr. Campomanes's behavior as "very mysterious."

"Something wrong is going on in Moscow," Mr. Olafsson was quoted as saying in an interview with Iceland's main newspaper, "Campomanes should be called Karpovmanes," said Boris Spassky, a former Soviet world champion who now lives in France. He described Mr. Campomanes's decision as "very strange" and accused the official of being biased in favor of Mr. Karpov. In Geneva, Mr. Korchnoi urged members of the federation to "get together and declare Kasparov the winner."

"If one is unable to survive a match because of stress, weak health and so on, he is a loser," said Mr. Korchnoi.

Beirut Caller Reports Islamic Jihad Intends To Kill U.S. Hostage

New York Times Service

BEIRUT — A caller claiming to represent the Islamic Jihad terrorist organization has said that it has sentenced one of four American hostages held by the group to die.
The statement, made by an anonymous caller who telephoned

The caller also insisted that Jerabducted by the same group, emy Levin, a U.S. television reporter who had also been a hostage, did not escape as he said but was freed by his captors after intervention by a noted American Islamic person-health" on Saturday despite the 1! a noted American Islamic person-ality and after Islamic Jihad had ascertained that he was not involved in any activity against it.

U.S. Cancels 2d Military Exercise With New Zealand; Ties Reviewed

By Bernard Gwertzman

WASHINGTON — The United States has canceled a second set of military exercises with New Zea-land and said all security relations with the Pacific ally were under

The latest move was cancellation of anti-submarine exercises near Hawaii on Feb. 28. New Zealand was informed by Washington on Thursday night, the New Zealand defense minister, Frank O'Flynn, said Saturday morning in Wellington. The action was confirmed Saturday by State Department officials, who said a fuller statement would be made this week.

State Department officials said Saturday that the entire security relationship with New Zealand was under review. They predicted that virtually every military tie with New Zealand would be curtailed to show that Washington did not believe a country could have an alli-ance with the United States and avoid its full responsibilities.

Washington is also considering ending the policy of exchanging intelligence information with New Zealand officials said.

The administration has said it will not impose economic sanctions on New Zealand, but will not strongly argue New Zealand's case when members of Congress seek to end special trade preferences on such commodities as lamb and casein, a cheese and milk protein used in food and industrial products.

The dispute with New Zealand sharpened recently when Prime Minister David Lange refused per-

Union Carbide Blamed For Lapses in Bhopal

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches
NEW DELHI — The Indian overnment has blamed a series of lapses by Union Carbide Corp. at its pesticide plant in Bhopal for triggering the accident that killed more than 2,000 people. A study published Saturday by the Chemicals and Fertilizers Ministry said the company flouted safe-ty requirements and did not adequately train its employees at the plant. Besides the fatalities, tens of thousands of people were injured in the Dec. 3 accident, which involved a leak of methyl isocyanate gas.

The report said that Union Carbide, despite previous accidents in the plant involving leakage of phos-gene, a chemical intermediary in the manufacture of methyl isocyanate, did not improve safety standards or prepare a contingency

It also said that residents near the plant were not advised about elementary precautions in the event of leaks.

"Had that been done, the immense sufferings caused would have been substantially reduced," the ministry said.

The report said preliminary findings by government scientists indicated the catastrophe was caused by the entry of a foreign substance, possibly water, into an underground tank.

The report said the factory manseement did not immediately inform the local authorities when the gas leak occurred.

Plant officials did not know the exact quantity of methyl isocyanate stored in the factory nor could they suggest a treatment for gas inhalatons as Union Carbide had claimed, the ministry said.

The ministry said the authorities were considering establishment of a national scientific and medical committee for a study of the side effects caused by the gas.

A study by Bombay's Tata Insti-tute of Social Sciences said last week that more than 1,000 people were blinded by the gas. A team of Bhopal doctors, however, said there had been no cases of permanent blindness

Israeli Pullout: Element of Surprise Leads to Smooth Sidon Withdrawal

By Edward Walsh ion Post Service

KFAR FALOUS. Lebanon The last Israeli convoy to leave Sidon Saturday consisted of 38 vehicles, about 300 soldiers and two dogs. The dogs were named Vodka

Shortly after 2 P.M., about three hours after they began moving out of Sidon, the convoy passed this point about six miles (10 kilometers) east of the Lebanese port city, picking up mud as the heavy vehicles lumbered along a rain-swept mountain road.

From a nearby hillside, employees of the Hariri Medical Center, a huge, modern complex that looks out of place in the mountain countryside, watched silently as the last of the Israeli soldiers left.

With that, Israel's occupation of Sidon and the surrounding countryside, which has gone on for twoand a half years, came to an end.
The final hours passed quietly, exYitzhak Rabin said a few minutes cept for the growl of the engines of 25 armored personnel carriers, five eeps, five trucks and three tanks that moved in procession through mist and low-hanging clouds.

The pullback from Sidon was the start of a planned three-stage withdrawal from southern Lebanon that the Israeli Cabinet approved Jan. 14. The timing of the second and third stages has not been set, but on Saturday Israel stopped policing Sidon, the largest city in southern Lebanon, with a population of about 100,000. Israeli military officials said the first stage of the pullback was accomplished without incident. Israeli officials had said earlier that they had information that Lebanese Shiite Moslem militias were planning to disrupt the pullback.

in an apparent attempt to surprise the local militias, the Israelis pulled out of Sidon two days earlier than scheduled, and on the Jewish Sabbath. They may have also benefited from the weather, which shrouded the mountains east of Si-

Mr. Rabin repeated complaints that the Lebanese government refused to cooperate with Israel for an "orderly transfer" of the area evacuated Saturday. Saturday's withdrawal from the Sidon area was the second major Israeli army pullback in Lebanon since its June 1982 invasion. The first, the abrupt September 1983 withdrawal from the Chuf Mountains southeast of Beirut, was followed by bloody clashes between Lebanese Christian and Druze mi-

The Israelis were widely accused of exacerbating the Chul conflict by their sudden departure. This time, the Israelis gave five weeks' notice of their intention to withdraw and said repeatedly that they would not be held responsible for what happened after they left.

Nevertheless, when the time for the final move came, it happened quickly. Israeli bases in the area had been dismantled weeks ago, and all heavy equipment was moved south, leaving relatively few combat units to patrol the roads

These last soldiers received the order to prepare for the final withdrawal at about 8 A.M. Saturday. Two hours earlier, the Israelis had notified United Nations officials in southern Lebanon, the U.S. Embassy in Tel Aviv and the Lebanese government when the pullout would take place.

Late Saturday morning, Mr. Rabin and the Israeli Army chief of staff, Lieutenant General Moshe Levy, flew by helicopter to Buxata, a large Israeli base that overlooks the Awali River bridge on the Lebanese coastal highway just north of

King Fahd's Diplomacy

Saudi Arabia feels strongly about the Pales- government - about negotiations. Labor faunian issue and finds sponsorship of it vital to its diplomacy in the Arab world - no small need in view of the many dangers to Saudi Arabia arising from points outside Israel. So, true to form, King Fahd arrived in Washington hoping to draw President Ronald Reagan deeper into the Arab-Israeli question. For "moderate" Arabs, this means making an effort to deliver the Palestinians while calling upon the United States to deliver the Israelis. An evident part of the Saudi effort was the "framework for common action" that King Hussein of Jordan and Yasser Arafat, chairman of part of the Palestine Liberation Organization, produced word of while King Fahd was still in the American capital.

We say "word of" because the framework itself has been slow to be revealed. It is reputed to enable the PLO to join Jordan in an international peace conference, but it is not clear whether there is anything solid in it. or anything that could be made solid by further tending. "We're being optimistic about it." Mr. Reagan said. But Jordan and the PLO have a long record of evading the straightfor-ward commitment to recognize and negotiate with Israel, which is the only conceivable basis of peace between Arabs and Israelis.

Israel is of two minds — represented by the Labor and Likud elements of its national unity vors a territorial compromise on the West Bank and would accept direct negotiations with Jordan and with Palestinians acknowledging Israel's right to exist. Likud, leaning to absorption of the West Bank, has an interest in avoiding negotiations and in backing away from United Nations Resolution 242, calling for an exchange of territory for peace.

If the Jordanians and their friends are smart, they will play to Labor. They will get their act together while Labor's Shimon Peres is still prime minister. They will help Mr. Reagan revive his 1982 peace plan, which Mr. Peres favored when it was issued - the Begin government turned it down. They will realize there is no profit in fuzzy "frameworks."

in the Arab world the belief lingers that only second-term American presidents are free enough of Jewish pressure to bear down on Israel. The second-term Eisenhower, who pried Israel out of Sinai, is their model. This belief misstates, seriously and offensively, the basis of Israel's American support. But if Arabs believe it, let them accept its implications and make a clear move now. As for the Saudis, though they and the Americans have a history of disappointing each other on the Palestinian issue, the two share many other interests, and are working together to serve them.

Back to Basics, in French

It is not only in the United States that schools are being pushed to more rigorous standards of performance. The French government has now declared an end to the period of progressive and rather relaxed experimentation that began there in the late 1960s. By next September France's primary schools will have a new and very different curriculum that reaches back to the older tradition.

The action is a political anomaly: The progressive movement developed under conservative Gaullist governments, and the return to conventional discipline is now being imposed by a Socialist government. The current minister of education. Jean-Pierre Chevenement, is a leader of the Socialist Party's left wing and earlier, as minister of industry, made many enemies among French businessmen as an aggressive interventionist. But he is also a man of intellect who places great value on a trained mind and is affronted that, as he charges, one out of every five French children is illiterate upon leaving primary school at the age of 11. The cultural left and the political left are not always quite the same thing...

It is not only reading and arithmetic that are to be drilled under the new regimen. Mr. Chevenement wants French children to know where the country's rivers and cities are. President François Mitterrand has been complain-ing for some time about the style of history that devotes much attention to peasant life in the 17th century but leaves pupils very unclear regarding who was king when, and why a number of citizens thought it desirable to cut the head off one of them two centuries ago. It is back to names and dates.

Is that elitist, as France's progressive educators charge? Mr. Chevenement makes no apologies. When he was at the ministry of industry, he got a sharp sense that France was falling behind in the technologies by which the rich countries will either earn their livings or be-come much less rich. Having begun with the primary schools, he intends to undertake similar reforms — or, as some of the left com-plains, counter-reforms — at the higher levels. It is not all Corneille and Racine. He is currently spending serious amounts of money to put computers into the schools.

A country's educational system is always the truest reflection of the real structure of its society. For a century France's schools have been highly competitive, highly centralized and capable of producing extraordinary minds. There has always been an articulate minority of Frenchmen who wanted to see less pressure for achievement and more emphasis on equality. But the Socialists have concluded that, in a world becoming more competitive, France cannot become less so.

Other Opinion

Gibraltar's Open Door

The opening of negotiations between Britain and Spain to coincide with the opening of the border between Gibraltar and Spain is for the better, even though there is little cause to hope for a speedy breakthrough on the future of the disputed territory.

Britain is insisting on scrupulous respect for the wishes of the people of Gibraltar, who are ethnically Mediterranean but steadfast in their loyalty to the United Kingdom, wishing no change in the status of a self-governing colony.

This preoccupation with settler wishes has overtones of the Falkland Islands, where Britain has allowed the local population to veto efforts to draw up a compromise that better addresses the global issues.

That posture does not leave much to talk about with Spain, equally determined in its efforts to regain sovereignty over Gibraltar by rewriting history and the Treaty of Utrecht through which the Spanish government for-mally ceded the rock to Britain in 1713.

Interests of the free world will be equally well served whether London or Madrid has sovereignty. Monitoring the 50,000 ships that pass through the Strait of Gibraltar each year is in itself of considerable importance to Western defense. This is a gateway for the Soviet Black Sea fleet. The strait, a critical choke point for world navies in the event of war, could be equally well controlled by either ally. The border was closed 16 years ago by the late Spanish dictator, Francisco Franco, as part of his campaign to regain Spanish sovereignty. The closure only made negotiations more diffi-cult. Now the economic integration that is part of the agreement to reopen the border, and that will be reinforced when Spain enters the European Community next year, may help erode the sharper differences and make more likely some compromise.

- The Los Angeles Times. Exchange-Rate Crisis Persists

Prime Minister Margaret Thatcher of Britain is traveling to Washington this week — a painful moment in the world's obstinately persistent exchange rate crisis. It was only last month that her Chancellor of the Exchequer, Nigel Lawson, returned from the meeting of the Group of Five top finance ministers waving a piece of paper said to demonstrate a new willingness by the United States government to intervene against the dollar. This Group of Five communique is coming to look like the Munich agreement of the world's currency markets. There has, true enough, been some American intervention, but the American foreign exchange markets have treated it as a polite diplomatic triviality. The dollar has continued on its way, checked mainly by the German Bundesbank angrily accepting the main burden of intervention; or falling largely through normal market reactions as speculators realized their profits. One explanation is that Washington has for the past few weeks been paralyzed by an inter-regnum at the top of the United States Treasury, with vacancies too at other points of access to the president's ear. The markets are still daily waiting the resolution of this indecision; watching for evidence of substantial intervention by the Federal Reserve Board.

1910: Senator's Pipeline to Hell WASHINGTON - Senator Jefferson Davis, of Arkansas, created a sensation in the Senate [on Feb. 17] by the unrestrained anger of a speech against the Standard Oil Company. He rose to oppose a bill designed to grant the Standard Oil the right to construct a pipeline across public land in Arkansas. Working himself into a passion, the Senator burst upon the astonished assembly the following denunciation: "The only pipeline I would favor would be one in the direction of Hell. I would then want to see J.D. Rockefeller at the lower end of that pipe receiving the jet of burning oil till he was enveloped and destroyed by the product of his own evil organization." There were loud cries of order, but the Senator would not be set down until he had exhausted his tury, when he sank back into his seat pale with anger.

1935: Japan Plans Naval Buildup

TOKIO - Admiral Mineo Osumi, Navy Minister, revealed that Japan is planning a third naval replenishment program, starting with the fiscal year 1936-37. Osumi declared: "The first and second replenishment programs do not fully meet the requirements for national defense. The present plans may be adequate to pass through the crisis of 1935-36 (referring to Japan's withdrawal from the League of Nations and the expiration of the Washington-London naval limitation treaties), but it may be necessary to seek appropriations for the first portion of the third replenishment program in the fiscal year 1937." The Navy Minister said that the program would call for small vessels. "The fighting value of torpedo boats and other small war craft was demonstrated in last summer's naval maneuvers," he said.

Kremlin-Watching Has Its Frustrations

By Thane Gustafson

vietologists a few weeks ago when the Kremlin appointed Marshal Sergei L. Sokolov to be the new minister of defense, succeeding the late Dmitri F. Ustinov. The experts were wrong again, having predicted Grigori V. Romanov of the Politburo.

Sighs went up from exasperated reporters and government officials: Why are the Sovietologists unable to get their horses straight, especially with all the practice that they have had lately? The fact is that most Western Sovietologists had been betting on Marshal Sokolov right along. But then the Kremlin pulled a fake: It appointed Mr. Romanov head of the funeral commission that supervised the arrangements for Marshal Ustinov's burial in the Kremlin wall. Suddenly that seemed potent evidence for Mr. Romanov. After all, back in 1976 the first sign that Marshal Ustinov had been picked was when he headed the funeral commission for his predeces-sor, old Marshal Andrei Grechko. And only last year the clearest sign that Konstantin U. Chemenko had the leadership succession sewn up came when he led the funeral pro-cession for Yuri V. Andropov. In Moscow, it seems, he leads the living who led the dead. But, alas, not this time. Let him who has never flubbed one throw the first stone. Did all of you out there pick Bob Dole for Senate majority leader? Didn't some think that Jesse Helms would be chairman of the Senate Foreign Relations Committee?

In many respects the analogy is apt: In both cases we are talking

WASHINGTON — There were about decisions made in private by red faces among Western So-small groups of powerful men, with small groups of powerful men, with little direct input from outsiders. The rules are unwritten, and the bargaining is intense. Even insiders can go wrong. Soviet secrecy clouds the crystal ball even more.

In any case, is picking the winners in the Kremlin sweepstakes really the most useful measure of our knowledge of Soviet affairs? More interesting questions are: What does it all mean? How does it affect us?

The reason most Russia-watchers were betting on Marshal Sokolov (at least until they saw Mr. Romanov leading the funeral cortege) was that they saw him as the Kremlin's safest and easiest choice at a time when the top Soviet leaders seem inclined toward caution. Choosing Marshal Sokolov put the least strain on the delicate balance of power among the leaders, and caused the least tension between party and military leaders.

Only a couple of months before, the party leadership had abruptly fired the military chief of staff. Marshal Nikolai Ogarkov. We would have to go back over 25 years to find a similar case — Nikita S. Khrushchev's dismissal of Marshal Georgi K. Zhukov in 1957. In both cases a strong, outspoken professional soldier crossed the forbidden line separating the private from the public advocate: Marshal Zhukov by arguing for greater professional autonomy for the military. Marshal Ogarkov by calling for a radical program to modernize Soviet conventional forces. In firing them the par-ty reminded all who the real professionals of power are. Under these circumstances, ap-defense would have been a remarkable move. For more than a generation Soviet defense ministers have been either professional soldiers or military-industrial administrators. Mr. Romanov is neither, though his long years as party head in Leningrad made him familiar with mili-tary industries. He has recently been overseeing the military-industrial establishment as party secretary.

To have named him defense minister, however, especially after the Ogarkov dismissal, would have sug-gested that party leaders seriously distrusted the military, and that they wanted a career party official in charge. That is surely not the case. For Mr. Romanov the move would have been no less momentous, and hardly welcome. In assuming the defense job he would have had to give up his post as party secretary, and that would have removed him from contention for the No. I post as party general secre-tary. So the job fell to the man who, for the previous 17 years, had been the first deputy defense minister.

But Marshal Sokolov is by no means a nonentity. More than any other Soviet officer, he is associated ular in the West: arms sales to Third World countries, support for Third World insurgencies, counterinsur-gency in client states and, above all, the Soviet intervention in Afghanistan. If his appointment is a vote for continuity, it is not necessarily the kind of continuity that we will like. The choice is also a postponement. The issues that Marshal Ogarkov was raising, and that cost him his job, cannot be ducked forever by the Soviet leadership. They have to do with the technological competi-tiveness of the Soviet security sys-tem, and at 73 Marshal Sokolov is the oldest man to be appointed Soviet minister of defense.

The Time Is Ripe for Reagan to Play Syrian Card

By Milton Viorst

WASHINGTON — With King Fahd of Saudi Arabia urging President Ronald Reagan to renew his efforts for peace in the Middle East, and Israeli forces withdrawing from Lebanon, Mr. Reagan now has a duty to revive the United States peace initiative — but this time, I believe, turning the proposals he made earlier upside down.

Mr. Reagan's plan of Sept. 1, 1982, still the official American position, focuses on the West Bank, essentially a Palestinian and Jordanian concern. It is a territory on whose future Arabs and Israelis are deeply divided. Of all the land that Israel captured in 1967, the West Bank presents by far the most difficult problem to resolve.

Yet the outcome of the war in Lebanon left no doubt that Syria, Israel's strongest neighbor, has the power to veto any peace negotiations by Jor-dan and the Palestine Liberation Organization as well as by Lebanon. None can contemplate a West Bank settlement over Syrian objections. Mr. Reagan's 1982 plan overlooked Syrian power, ignoring the Golan Heights, the Syrian territory Israel occupies. It would thus make sense now, as a tactical matter, to repair the error and redraw the Reagan proposal by placing the Golan problem at the top of the agenda.

Being left alone without the Golan Heights is Syria's obsession. Syria burns over the peace that returned the Sinai to Egypt while leaving the Golan Heights with Israel. It remains angry at Iraq for breaking the Arab front to make war on Iran. Syria's fallback strategy is to reach military parity with Israel, then to Such a plan requires long-term de-pendency on Moscow, which Syria palpably dislikes. Moscow's permanent involvement in the region is also contrary to American interests. But if a settlement is in our interest, is Syria disposed to settle? Its critics, citing its imperial dreams, say no. Formally, Damascus subscribes to Security Council Resolution 242, which promises peace upon Israel's restoration of the captured territories. No one knows — including Damascus itself, perhaps — whether it is serious about 242, but Mr. Reagan, in his peace plan, missed the chance to submit Syria to a test.

From a political perspective, Syria leaves no doubt that it will never concede to Israel the right to perma-nent tenure of the Golan Heights. Of more immediate importance, however, is Syria's perception of Israel as a inreal to its security. To Syrian stra egists, Lebanon is the country's vulnerable western flank, while the Golan Heights is a short drive across flat terrain to the capital, Damascus.

To the Syrians, a submissive Lehanon is vital. Still, having occupied much of the country since 1976, shortly after the civil war started, they have not annexed any of it. From this evidence, it appears that the Israeli Army in their capital. even if some Syrians would like to Yitzhak Rabin, the Israeli defense absorb Lebanon into a "Greater Syria," official policy is to have it continue as an anti-Israel buffer. Israel's government is also willing to keep Lebanon as a buffer. As for the Golan Heights, it is strategically vital to both. Israel, shelled for two decades by Syrian guns, has no intention of letting them return. But the Syrians recover the Golan Heights by force. fear they will one day wake up to find President Hafez al-Assad of Syria comment to The New York Times.

Trumpeted Tax Plans

By Richard Coben

W ASHINGTON — Trumpet fanfare, please. On Nov. 27th, the Treasury Department announced a tax-simplification plan of the type President Ronald Reagan has long wanted. The plan made page one in all the newspapers. The newspapers speech that he was all for it.

But for what? It turns out that the president was "unaware" that the Treasury plan would raise corporate taxes about 37 percent. When he was asked in a recent interview what he thought about that, Mr. Reagan flinched: What rise? What corporate taxes? Throughout America, corporate executives and coupon-clippers alike presumably jumped for joy. They all had thought that corporate taxes might increase — that the president knew what was contained in the proposal he had vowed would become law. Silly, silly people.

Of course, it is well known that Mr. Reagan is not a detail man and the Treasury package was nobody's idea of a final draft, but a kind of model bill instead. Still, we are not talking mere details here, but the sort of broad policy decisions that moved even Ralph Nader, the consumer advocate, to sing arias of praise for the proposal. The increase in corporate taxes was a basic part of the package. Without it, the Treasury could not claim that individual tax rates could be lowered and the package remain.

Even after more than four years of Mr. Reagan this is a remarkable episode. With tax simplification, we are not talking about some minor bill. but a major, even epic, piece of legis-lation. You would think that the president would be familiar with its major provisions, especially since one of them — an increase in corporate tax-

ly," comes back the reply from lots of cople. They point out that Mr. Reagan is a smashing success as president and it hardly matters that he concentrates only on the big picture, leaving the details to others. "Look at the economy," they say. "Look at the inflation rate," they say. "Look at the deficit — No! No! Do not look at that." But the deficit is exactly where they should look. It is out of control

The reason there's a deficit is that the Reagan economic program never added up. No amount of wishing could change the math: Cut taxes and increase defense spending and you are going to get red ink.

It is the same with "star wars." Wanting to do away with nuclear weapons is not a technological breakthrough: It is a wish. And no amount of wishing changes the awful logic of deterrence. The same is true of tax reform. Lowering the tax rate for individuals is not possible if corporate taxes are not raised. Someday all these chickens are going to come home to roost. A federal budget that is $200 billion in the hole is trying to tell you something. A nuclear defense based on a dream amounts to nothing more than mon-ey tossed down a wishing well. And a tax plan that decreases everyone's taxes and still takes in the same amount of money cannot exist in re-ality. Like a balanced budget, "star wars" and the erstwhile falling dominoes of the Middle East, it soars above reality like a balloon over Washington, Weighty facts have been thrown overboard at the start. Washington Post Writers Group.

Brussels Ruling May Slam Door on Auto Upturn kar's team has forecast a worst-case scenario in

By Giles Merritt

BRUSSELS—If you want to buy a new car in Europe, wait until the summer. That is when car prices are due to start tumbling, thanks to a recent move by the European Community Commission to outlaw the dodges that the makers have been using to keep the different national markets in the community nicely watertight. The variations had become quite absurd. Last fall a survey showed that list prices for very standard model automobiles could differ from one European country to another by between a third and a half. An Austin Metro made in Britain, for instance, cost 49 percent more in its native Birmingham than in a Belgian salesroom.

The culprits are the price controls that in Belgium, and to a lesser extent France, make sure that cars sell for much less there than in the rest of the EC. Where the automobile giants went wrong, though, was in deliberately frustrating ordinary buyers' efforts to arrange their own "parallel exports," to use EC jargon, by purchasing cars in a cheaper country and then personally importing them into their home countries.

The car companies, including the Japanese, tried very hard to stop that practice. They bitterly contest price controls where they exist, and the further prospect of losing profitable sales in their higher priced national markets rankles. As of July 1, however, a new EC regulation will make their selective distribution systems a lot more controllable. If prices begin to look as if they are being distorted by a manufacturer, then the full weight of the EC's fair competition rules will be brought to bear. The effect should be that right across Europe car prices will start falling to the levels seen in Belgium and France.

At first sight, this seems an excellent performance by the EC commission. Big business has at last been stopped from bullying the consumer. The "People's Europe" launched last June at the EC's Fontainebleau summit is already seen to be bearing fruit. Unfortunately, however, there is much more at stake than consumers' rights and the sad truth is that the EC's intervention may turn out to be less than beneficial. If car prices plunge dramatically, that could cost European car makers something like $3 billion a year in lost revenues. As it now costs over $1 billion to develop a new model car, it is possible that by the 1990s European cars will have become as technologically backward as Soviet-made ones of today. For just as Europe's car industry was beginning to pick itself off the floor, having accumulated losses of $4 to $5 billion during the early 1980s, the new EC regulation could knock it flat again. Ford has warned that one of its six European plants may be forced to close. This could mean the loss of the 57,000 Ford jobs in Britain. The situation is little better elsewhere in Europe. According to a new study by professor Krish Bhaskar, director of the University of East Anglia's motor industry research unit, the next five years promise only break-even balance sheets and accelerating job losses if the European automobile sector is to survive at all. Mr. Bhaswhich the European industry might lose as much as $5 billion, but the more likely outcome is reckoned to be a tiny profit by 1988 that would be bought only by massive shedding of labor. To compete with Detroit's robotics strategy for halving the present 130 man-hours per car, and with Korean wages of $2 an hour, the Europeans need to cut 200,000 people off their present auto-sector payroll, which at present totals 1.7 million. In short, there are going to be some very tough choices to be made if Europe's motor vehicles sector is to be recognizably the same industry 10 years from now. The temptation is to dismiss the industry's difficulties as just another business saga. But the health of the motor manufacturers will be crucial to Europe's economic outlook. If the major car producers are forced to opt for "out-sourcing" — the development of, say, Bra-zilian or Asian plants at the expense of European ones — the EC will lose the race to catch up technologically with Japan and America.

So what should the European commission have done, if tinkering with car prices and distri-bution practices is not the answer? It ought to have concentrated instead on the "uncommon market" disparities between EC countries that both created the prices muddle yet make European car companies less competitive. The abolition of national price controls and a drive on fiscal harmonization to smooth out tax differences of up to 200 percent on a car would be a help to both the industry and the consumer. Latent Chauvinism

Regarding the opinion column "U.S. Declaration of Independence on Third World" (Feb. 5):

When not writing on etymology William Safire concentrates on ethnology. Referring to the Third World countries as the "Most Backward Nations" and world boondogglers and their leaders as "strident, intolerant, and often corrupt" and officials of the World Court and UNESCO as personally and politically corrupt is hardly the expression of intelligent contemporary thought in any of the Most Forward Countries.

On the same page, William Pfaff, (Victorian) period — the main differin "A Look at the Wrongs of Ameri-ence being that while the Englishmen

Sea Rights Debate

Regarding "Turkish Response" (Letters, Jan. 16) by H. Baru:

Undoubtedly everybody will be pleased and agree with Mr. Batu's opinion on treaties. Greece acquired, the Sea Convention, the right to extend her waters to 12 miles (19 kilometers) from six miles. This matter is quite independent from the Treaty of Lausanne in 1923.

Although Greece, with her "good neighbor" spirit, does not nourish any absolute wish of applying her right, the Turkish side has in the last lű vears acted in a somewhat peculiar way in interpreting the treaties, disputing not only sea areas and airspace of the "eastern part of the Aegean," but even the nationality of our islands near the Turkish mainland.

FRNs Are Lone Bright Spot Amid Glut of Unsold Bonds

By CARL GEWIRTZ

ARIS - Confusion about the direction of interest rates and billions of dollars worth of unsold fixed-coupon bonds remaining in the hands of underwriters cast a pall over the Eurobond market last week. The only bright spot was the floating-rate market, considered the safest option when the outlook for rates is uncertain, where a hefty $2.14 billion worth of notes were offered. This tally does not include the $1.998 billion of domestic floating-rate notes offered by Icahn Group Inc. that are being marketed internationally

The most novel of the FRNs was Inco Ltd.'s $100 million of 10-year notes, whose structure turns the paper into a true money market instru-

The main attraction of FRNs is the fact that the coupon is reset at fixed intervals to reflect changes in shortterm interest rates. The main disadvantage is that noteholders can never be absolutely sure of reselling the paper without a loss.

In principle, the value of an FRN should settle at par each time a new coupon is set, as on that day it is valued to reflect conditions in the money market. But there is no guarantee. If the borrower's credit rating falls and investors deem that its paper should, for example, carry a margin of 1/4

point over the London interbank offered rate, or Libor, instead of the 1/16 it offers, the notes may never trade at par. The Inco notes are structured to overcome this worry. Investors are assured that on any interest payment date they can "put" the notes back — at par value — to a group of banks that have agreed to serve as guarantors.

These banks can then try to resell the notes through a standing tender panel or, if that fails, hold the notes and offer them to the tender panel on the next coupon date.

This is very much like Euronotes, which currently are very popular. The key difference, however, is that purchasers of Euronotes are assured of a yield for only the duration of the oneto six-month notes.

Subsequent reissue of the Euronotes may be at terms very different from the initial sale. By contrast, Inco holders can lock in a yield to final maturity. The Inco notes will bear a coupon of 3/16 point over the six-month Libor. The tender panel will bid for the notes and if successful will distribute them at negotiated rates to clients.

S the bank guarantors, who are not yet identified, stand ready to redeem the notes and as major banks currently pay 1/16 to 1/8 over Liber to borrow themselves, investors presumably will be found to buy the Inco notes at a price less than 3/16 point over Libor.

This means the paper would be sold at a premium, or a onetime charge whose cost to investors would diminish the longer the notes are held, an incentive for investors to hold the paper and thus amortize the charge.

Canadian Imperial Bank of Commerce, the lead manager, believes that the multi-bank guaranty to buy back the notes gives the issue added attraction because investors have the collective guaranty of a group of banks to fall back on rather than the single-bank risk in buying, for example, notes issued by Citicorp.
What Inco is paying these banks to provide the guaranty has not yet been divulged. Commissions on the FRN total % percent. of which Canadian Imperial Bank is keeping 1/2 percent as a praecipuum, or a bonus. The bank has named the structure vides a guaranty. Inco has been operating at a loss since 1981, and some bankers believe this loan structure can enable companies that otherwise would not have access to the capital market to gain that access. The World Bank is also tapping the FRN market, offering $500 (Continued on Page 9, Col. 1)

New Bid Made for Wheelock

Y.K. Pao Enters Fight for Firm

By Dinah Lee

International Herald Tribune
HONG KONG — The battle for control of Wheelock Marden & Co., one of Hong Kong's oldest trading and shipping companies, heated up over the weekend with the second takeover bid in three

The new contender is Sir Y.K. Pao, the world's biggest private shipowner, through his Hong Kong-based firm, Hongkong & Kowloon Wharf and Godown Co.

Last Thursday, a Singapore hotel and property magnate, Khoo Teck Puat, announced that he had already acquired 13.5 percent of Wheelock's voting rights through a purchase of 21,035,157, or 6.7 percent, of the A, and 53,548,730 or 22.7 percent of the B shares from the family interests of the Wheelock chairman, John L. Marden.

Mr. Khoo's bid put the value of the company at 1.9 billion Hong Kong dollars ($243.6 million) with an offer to remaining shareholders of 6 dollars for every A ordinary share and 60 cents for every B ordi-

Trading in Wheelock A shares was suspended at 5.80 dollars on Thursday, but the price shot up from Wednesday's close of 5.05 dollars to 6.40 dollars when activity resumed on Friday, effectively eclipsing Mr. Khoo's bid.

Sir Y.K. Pao's offer, announced Saturday, was 10 percent higher than the Khoo bid, or 6.60 dollars for the A ordinary shares and 66 cents for the B shares, putting the value of the Wheelock group at about 2.23 billion dollars.

Wardley Ltd., a Hong Kong merchant bank acting on behalf of Wharf, indicated that Sir Y.K. Pao had acquired 34 percent of the voting rights of the group. Hong Kong's disclosure rules are such that it is difficult to confirm how Sir Y.K. Pao obtained this share, but bankers close to the battle say there are strong indications that a director of two Wheelock subsidiaries, John Cheung, has joined forces with Sir Y.K. Pao to foil the Khoo bid. It has been rumored in the local market for many years that Mr. Marden and Mr. Cheung disagreed strongly over the future of the group, particularly with re-gard to the troubled shipping interests of Wheelock.

Hong Kong regulations require that trading in Wheelock shares be suspended again on Monday fol-lowing the bid by Wharf. However, it is probable that prices will rise this week when trading resumes because rumors of more counterbids are already circulating in Hong Neither Mr. Khoo nor Sir Y.K. Pao has made a public statement of plans for the Wheelock group should be gain control. On Saturday, members of Wheelock's board urged shareholders to take no action on either offer and not to dispose of their holdings until an "independent committee" of the board makes a statement. Wheelock's executive manager, D.A. Graham, declined on Sunday to say who the members of the independent committee are.

It is believed that Mr. Khoo would like to use Wheelock as a vehicle for expanding his hotel interests, which are already considerable in Singapore and Australia, into Hong Kong and China.

There has also been speculation that Sir Y.K. Pao might be attracted by the healthy property opera-tions of the Wheelock group, in-cluding Realty Development Corp. and Hongkong Realty & Trust Co. Mr. Cheung is a director of both of

A merchant banker involved in the takeover battle said Sunday that the bidding could "drag on for two to three months."

Licensing: New Joy for U.S. Toy Firms Britain Sues Toy Licensing: The Latest Entries

Concept Is Cited As Reason for Big '84, Bright Future

NEW YORK - A week ago, a new set of potentially hot licensing products made their debut. The an-imals of Wuzzles, the "plush people" of Hugga Bunch, the warring forces of MASK, the women of the Princess of Power and the "insec-toids" of Sectaurs were introduced at the opening of the American International Toy Fair here.

As Coleco Industries' Cabbage Patch dolls showed, international licensing of toys has become more sophisticated, and far more lucrative, in recent years.

The Cabbage Patch licensing episode was a success through the United States and much of Europe, and its numerous spinoffs are likely to continue that success for some time to come.

The current practice, which was used with much success by Coleco in its Cabbage Patch strategy, involves creating an entire storyline, or fantasy, around a particular product, and then selling — or li-censing — the marketing rights to accessories that can include everything from greeting cards to cloth-

There is absolutely no question that licensing is an important change," said Paul Valentine, toy analyst with Standard & Poor's Corp. "It is a reflection of the more sophisticated marketing of toy companies, the ability to create characters that have their own identity."

This year's toy fair follows one of the industry's most successful years. Manufacturers' shipments in 1984 soared by more than 51 per-cent, to about $8 billion, from $5.3 billion the year before, according to the Toy Manufacturers of America. Retail sales in the United States alone jumped about 20 percent, to about $12 billion.

The year's results were helped by several tremendously popular items, including the Cabbage Patch dolls; the Trivial Pursuit game, another popular export; robot toys, such as the Transformers and the Gobots, and stuffed animals, such as Care Bears - all of them successful licensing properties.

The concept of licensing toys was born with the introduction of Strawberry Shortcake, a doll in a far, there are 34 Wuzzles licensees, of control, and insects have grown red dress that swept the toy indus-

As in the past, the World Bank shuns using the London interbank rate for its cost of money. "That's a rate that reflects the cost of money for commercial banks; we're not a commercial bank," says the World Bank treasurer, Eugene Rotberg.

The base rate is the three-month

U.S. Treasury bill rate. Bank of America, Société Générale and Hydro-Québec are using the mismatching technique on their issues, in which coupons tied to three-month Libor or six-month Libor are reset monthly. This allows bank investors to pick up extra yield by funding their purchases with one-month money while earning interest at the higher three- or six-month rate.

The fixed-coupon market was overshadowed by issues bearing coupons that were widely regarded as unrealistically low.

Nestle was offering to pay 9% percent for three-year money, while Nabisco and American International Group offered 10% percent for five-year funds. Nestlé was quoted at a discount of % point, and Nabisco at less 11/s. These prices were not deemed realistic.

The previous slide of the mark and very substantial sales of domestic DM bonds, which pushed prices down and yields up, caused West German bankers to close the DM Eurobond market for three weeks. The scheduled issues for Spain and the InterAmerican Development Bank were canceled. The moves had a salutary affect on Eurobond prices and bankers said selling in the domestic market has

EUROPE 1 COMMUNICATION

The Board of Directors of the EUROPE 1 COMMUNICATION accounts of the fiscal year ending on September 30, 1984.

1) Net results of the company amount to FF 10.477,000 (against FF 20.322,000 for the preceding fiscal year) after tax on profits of FF 28.093,000 and after exceptional provisions of FF 67,172,000 mainly concerning the SSE Tele-Monte-Carlo branch which showed a heavy deficit, taking into account the takeover of the cost of a possible withdrawal of its Italian branch T.V.I.

2) Consolidated results (not finally settled) will be about 25 million Francs, of which approximately half for the group share, against FF 22,611,000 in 1982-83.

 In view of the much improved outlook for the 1984-85 fiscal year, the Board will propose to the General Meeting, the date of which has been set on March 28, 1985 in Monaco, to resume the distribution of the dividend, interrupted in 1984, at a price of FF 15 net per share.

4) For the first quarter of the 1984-85 fiscal year, the pretax turnover for radio-broadcasting activities of the group amounted to FF 151.612.000 against FF 151.485.000 for the same period of the preceding fiscal year. A 5.90% rate increase in 1985, after 3% in 1984, should allow the group turnover to return to a more normal growth; this is confirmed by the results of the month of January 1985 which showed a 6% increase compared with January 1984.

Navratilova Beats Evert in U.S. Tennis Final

DELRAY BEACH, Florida (AP) - Martina Navratilova crushed Chris Evert

Lloyd, 6-2, 6-4, here Saturday to win the women's singles title at the International Players Championships. It took Navratilova an hour and 10 minutes to avenge a straight-set loss to Evert in a tour event at Miami earlier this month; before that loss, Navratilova had beaten Evert 13 straight.

The earlier loss to Evert "just got me going again —got me excited about playing and gave me something to prove," Navratilova said.

Americans Scott Davis and Tim Mayotte were to meet in Sunday's men's final.

Davis downed 11th-seeded Tomas Smid of Czechoslovakia, 7-6, 6-4, 4-6, 6-3, late Friday, and Mayotte eliminated Jan Gunnarsson of Sweden, 7-6, 6-2, 4-6, 6-1.

Girardelli Wins Title In Slalom

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches KRANJSKA GORA, Yugoslavia - Marc Girardelli, rebounding from two disappointing performances in the world Alpine championships. edged Ingemar Stenmark of Sweden Saturday to win a men's stalom race and clinch the World Cup title in that discipline.

Ninth after the first run, Girardelli was nearly flawless the second time. His winning time of 1 minute, 43.11 seconds was .05 seconds better than the 1:43.16 posted by Stenmark, who led Girardelli by 61 seconds after the opening leg.

Jonas Nilsson of Sweden, who upset Girardelli in the world championship slalom, skied to a third-place tie with Paul Frommelt of Liechtenstein. Both clocked 1:43.88.

Girardelli, who skies for Luxembourg, had settled for a silver in slalom and a bronze in giant slalom at the world championships and was third in a giant slalom here Friday.

The victory was Girardelli's fifth of the season in slalom and gave him a maximum score of 125 points in that category. Girardelli added 25 points to his overall score and, with eight races remaining, his 240 points put him 33 ahead of the defending champion, Pirmin Zurbriggen of Switzerland. But Girardelli can score only 10 more points — by winning two of three remaining giant statoms — while Zurbriggen can collect up to 140 in downhill, giant slalom and slalom. (AP, UPI)

FRAGRANCE: The Story of Perfume From Cleopatra to Chanel

B; Edwin T. Morris. 304 pp. Illustrated, 524.95. Scribner, 597 Fifth Avenue, New York, N. Y. 10017.

Reviewed by John Gross

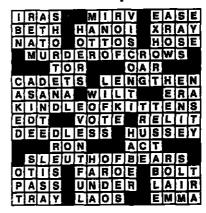

N the preface to "Fragrance," Edwin T. I Morris telis us that when he first became interested in the history of perfume he felt embarrassed. It was "as if I were researching trivia or had become the archivist of idleness. But the more he studied the subject, the more substantial it seemed, touching as it did on 50 many aspects of culture and society.

To write the full history of fragrance, indeed, would call for the scholarship of a Fernand Braudel, and while Morris's book has no such pretensions, it does cover an exceptionally wide range of topics, from the chemistry of solvent extraction to the olfactory habits of fish. Fortunately, however, Morris, who teaches fragrance at the Fashion Institute of Technology in New York, has not allowed the more austere aspects of his subject to overshadow its zlamour.

He begins by getting down to essentials — the "essential oils" on which all perfumery depends. Most of these derive from plants, and Morris analyzes their various aromatic group-ings in beguiling detail. Flowers that give off a languorous sweetness, for instance - jasmine, lilies, hyacinths, honeysuckle - are signaling to the moth, on whom they rely for pollination. and commercial scents with this heady type of fragrance, such as White Shoulders or Je Reviens. "would meet with a moth's approval." Indeed, "despised as he is among men, the moth is the true aristocrat of scent.

In addition, a few essential oils are derived from fossil fuels or animals. Ambergris, for example, is secreted to protect the intestinal lining of the sperm whate from the sharp bones of the cuttlefish it eats. And civet is one of those products that make you wonder about prehistoric methods of research. Who on earth first thought of removing a fatty substance that is formed near the genitalia of civet cats and has "a revoltingly fecal odor," even if it does become "extremely agreeable and strongly fix-ative when blended with other essences"?

Solution to Friday's Puzzle

The original use of perfume, preserved in the Latin from which the word comes, was as incense kindled to the gods. Morris takes up the story in Mesopotamia, where the most prized of all incenses was that of the cedar of Lebanon - the name "Lebanon" itself is derived from an Akkadian word for inceuse and moves on to trace the development of perfumery both sacred and secular in the Near East, Greece and Rome, the Arab world, India,

China and Japan. It is a survey that ranges from the balm of Gilead to the slaves called "cosmetae" who prepared scents for Roman matrons. We learn of the musk that was mixed in the mortar of Persian mosques so that they would exude a soft scent when they were struck by the rays of the sun, and pay our respects to Lady Murasaki (her name means "wisteria"), who around the year 1000 described Japanese "incense parties" at which two players "listened" to different types of fragrance and discussed their qual-

By contrast medieval Europeans, who seldom took baths and would have had every-thing to gain from perfuming themselves, were late developers. Renaissance humanism, the opening up of the spice trade, and increasing mastery of distillation and glassmaking al combined to produce a more positive attitude, however, and by the 18th century, the Enrope an perfume trade had begun to assume its modern form. An Italian barber who went to Germany to seek his fortune in 1709 founded the dynasty that marketed eau de cologne; venerable concerns like the house of Houbigant were established in Grasse before the French Revolution.

The French continued to dominate the industry throughout the 19th century, and well beyond. The great names of the Second Empire included Guerlain (which created their longlived Eau Imperiale for the Empress Engenie and Worth (which pioneered the idea of a fashion house marketing its own perfume). Eugene Rimmel, the head of the house, wrote the first serious history of perfume (published in 1865), a learned work printed on scented paper. It was Guerlain which also created the most fashionable perfume of the Belle Epoque, 'Jicky" (the nickname of a young member of the family called Jacques).

In the 20th century, French perfumers showed themselves the supreme masters of the art of packaging. François Coty (a Corsican whose real name was Sportuno) commissioned Rene Lalique to design his bottles and hired Leon Baksi to design a box for his powder, using paper of red, black and gold. It was Coty, as he watched departing American soldiers buying up vast quantities of perfume, who was the first to grasp the full possibilities of the American market. Others followed — Jeanne Lanvin, for example, who created a perfume called Mon Peche that didn't catch on in France until she switched to the name under which it was being successfully sold in the United States, My Sin.

"Fragrance" is a satisfying piece of work. It reflects the pleasure that the author takes in his subject, and if it isn't printed on scented paper it does at any rate have some excellent and well-chosen illustrations.

"That's two goals — they gave one to them and took one away from us — that decided the outcome of the game without any question," Maloney said.

France Defeats Scotland in Rugby, 11-3

By Bob Donahue at Herald Tribune

PARIS - By never giving up, David Leslie's Scots escaped a rug-by rout Saturday, but not a beating. Three bursts of applause from the French crowd in the closing minutes saluted Scottish spirit and reproached the home team for botching the show. France's 11-3 victory margin should have been bigger.

Colin Deans, playing for Scotland for the 37th time, could not recall a faster game. The French attacked and harried in frenetic fits. The patchy match made for exciting television, with the help of exciting television, with the help of close-ups and replays, but it tanta-lized onlookers. "It could have been a classic," summed up Ray Gravell, the Welsh center turned commentator, in a typical plaint. Scotland, which won all four of its Five Nations matches last year, has now lost to Ireland and France. Why the plunge? Teams usually find grand slams a hard act to follow. Scotland's in 1984 was its first since 1925. After peaking to that height, key players have found it all the harder to recover form due to injury and snowed-out weekends. At Saturday night's banquet, Leslie had a more obvious explanation for Scottish failure: French power and skill. "The best team won." the new captain cheerfully declared, addressing the French table. "We're quite sure of that."

The French started fast, bent on repairing reputations after an inept 9-9 draw against England two weeks earlier. Three times in the first quarter France ran penalties instead of kicking. Lopsided territorial advantage enabled flyhalf Jean-Patrick Lescarboura to attempt a drop and a penalty goal before Scottish fullback Peter Dods scored first with a penalty in the 17th minute.

That goal punished a punch by tain Philippe Dintrans as the Scot-tish scrumhalf swiveled for a descarboura concurred. Lineout also complained. French left wing Patrick Estève fumbled three likely scoring passes, juggling with the unfamiliar ball each time.

Despite swirling gusts in the Par-is sunshine, Dods said the wind was not a problem. Whatever the explanation, his recent average of 13 points a match slipped as he missed two kickable penalties. Wing Peter Steven missed one and center Keith Murray muffed a drop.

French kickers threw away 22 points. Lescarboura, who had been averaging 12 points a match, missed three penalties, two drops and two conversions. Fullback Serge Blanco missed a penalty. In all, the game's five goalkickers connected twice in 14 attempts. Many punts failed to find touch.

Without the fumbling and the miskicking - and a botched pushover early in the last quarter, when No. 8 Jean-Luc Joinel impatiently picked up the ball in an advancing scrum less than a yard from Scotland's line - gutsy Scottish defense would not have been enough to prevent a runaway.

Instead the second half was scoreless and Scotland spent more than 40 minutes only eight points down. The Scots, not the French. sang at the banquet — a lusty version of "Bye, Bye Blackbird" at the moment, after dessert, when earnest speechifying was due to start at the head table. But Bianchi hurt a carboura and center Philippe Sella flicked the ball on to center Didier Codorniou, who sent Blanco sailing between Scotland's centers. The second came in the 35th minute, when Lescarboura checked to dropkick, changed his mind and fed Sella on the right. A long pass and Blanco was through again. Four more French tries seemed close, as English referee Laurie Prideaux played advantage rather than whistle at every chance. The

Bramble Hammers Mancini, Keeps Title

By Michael Katz

New York Times Service RENO, Nevada — A breathtaking if bloody 15-round fight, which began with a skull and crossbones and ended with expressions of love, may have gloriously capped the boxing career of Ray Mancini, not with victory but with dignity.

Livingstone Bramble, sometimes belligerent, sometimes hateful in the buildups to his two victories over Mancini, entered the ring with a skull and crossbones on his trunks. He left it, 15 grueling rounds later, embracing Mancini and telling the former charming "Ray. I love embracing Mancini and telling the former champion, "Ray, I love you, I love you." Bramble found it was much tougher retaining the World Boxing Association lightweight title Saturday night than it was winning it from Mancini last June 1 with a 14th-round knockout. In fact, all three judges wound up giving the 24-year-old from the Virgin Islands the verdict by a single point.

Judges James Rondeau and Dave Moretti had Bramble ahead, 143142, in a nonstop bout that was among the finest in recent years; judge
Ed Levine had Bramble ahead, 144-143.

Mancini did not complain. He did not look like a winner, with bad cuts over both eyes and his left eye nearly swollen shut, while Bramble was unmarked. But fighting with those handicaps — twice, in the eighth and 15th rounds, referee Mills Lane interrupted the bout to ask the ringside physician whether the 23-year-old Mancini could continue — the challenger rallied in the later rounds. If these were to be his final moments in the ring, he made them some of his finest. "That's the question you guys want to know — should I go on?" he said at the post-fight news conference. "Right now, it doesn't look good, does it?

"But it wouldn't be fair to myself if I answer right now. I need a rest. I need some tender loving care from my family. I wish I had a wife. But if my heart says, 'Hey, I came that close to winning,' I've got to be true to myself. I've got to go on."

His manager, Dave Wolf, said he would prefer Mancini retire. "There was so much dignity in that ring tonight," said Wolf. "This is the right way to call it off. But the decision is up to Ray. He's earned that right. And whatever his decision is, I will abide by it."

Bramble, now 23-1-1, listened as Wolf and Mancini's father, Lenny, expressed their hopes that the storybook career would end now. "There's no way Ray Mancini should retire, unless he wants to retire," said Bramble. "He fought a tough fight, a great fight." Bramble fought a better one, although he was not as dominant as he had been in the men's first meeting. Then, he rather easily picked off Mancini's punches and countered with stinging blows of his own. But Saturday night there were long times when Mancini outboxed the boxer and Bramble outslugged the slugger. For the most part, they stood in the middle of the ring, swinging. Bramble's punches were the harder. He often staggered Mancini with right uppercuts, but he also was effective with his jab. The champion switched back and forth from orthodox to southpaw stances, but was most effective fighting as a right-hander, where he better utilized his 9-inch (22.8 centimeter) reach advantage.

Mancini, now 29-3 (his only other loss was to Alexis Arguello), fought a wiser battle this time. More and more, his punches were down the middle, through Bramble's long-armed defense and they landed with better accuracy. But except for some moments in the sixth round, when a series of right hands had Bramble backing up, his punches seemed to have little effect.

And that was when he had to change from attack to defense in order to protect his damaged eyes. In the fifth round, Mancini was cut on the right eyelid. Then, in the sixth, for the first time in 20 rounds against a man who claims to have a "coconut head," Mancini discovered that coconuts could be shelled. But Mancini's frail skin did not give him the opportunity to bombard. In the seventh, his left eye was cut and it swelled nearly shut almost immediately.

He had to resort to boxing from the outside and Bramble now was in control of the fight

But somehow Mancini's great heart and desire kept him going. And as the fight, and quite possibly his career, neared the finish, he reached down and with the same intensity that he won the title for his father in 1982 from Art Frias, he almost won this one for himself.

Costello Retains WBC Crown on 12-Round Decision Bill Costello retained his World Boxing Council super-lightweight crown Saturday with a unanimous 12-round decision over top contender Leroy Haley, The Associated Press reported from Kingston, New York. It was Costello's third successful defense of the crown he won from Bruce Curry in January 1984. Costello, now 30-0, dominated from the seventh round on. Working off a straight jab and hooks to the body, Costello lowered Haley's record to 49-5-2 on judges' decisions of 119-109, 116-111 and 118-111.

Lying and Consequences

By William Safire WASHINGTON — "I came here to prove that Time lied," announced Ariel Sharon after a libel jury had found that a paragraph in a story about him was defamatory and in error. "We were able to prove," the former Israeli defense minister said, "that Time did lie."

"The jury said not that we lied," countered Henry Grunwald, Time's editor in chief, "but that we made a mistake in good faith, and I just wish Mr. Sharon would stop talking about the jury proving that we 'lied.' "To back up his interpretation, Time's editor pointed to the jury's finding that no malice had been proved.

Thus, a new fight broke out over the meaning of the word lie. Was a lie merely an untruth - or was it an untruth, or falsehood, told with

The central point in U.S. libel law affecting celebrated people has to do with intent - was the statement published maliciously, know-ing it was wrong or with "reckless disregard" of whether it was inaccurate? Interestingly, the central point in the semantics of the noun lie and the verb to lie has also to do with intent — is inadvertent or honest error a lie? Do you lie when you make a false statement, thinking it to be the truth? Or do you merely misstate the facts, quite different from a deliberate distortion?

The Oxford English Dictionary defines the noun as "an act or instance of lying," which doesn't help much, but then gets to the essence of the word as it was defined about a century ago: "a false statement made with intent to deceive; a criminal falsehood." It contrasts this criminal, malicious meaning with white lie, which it defines as "a consciously untrue statement which is not considered criminal: a falsehood rendered venial or praiseworthy by its motive." In the OED, the meaning of lie, the black variety, is unambiguous: a lie is told (originally "made") with conscious, deliberate intent to deceive.

No less an authority than the lexicographer Samuel Johnson preferred a loose construction: "Johnson had accustomed himself to use the word lie." wrote Boswell in 1781, "to express a mistake or an errour . . . though the relater did not mean to deceive." That was odd: in Johnson's Dictionary, lie is defined as "criminal falsehood." and a quotation is given from the English clergyman Robert South: "A the is properly an outward signification of something contrary to, or at least beside, the inward sense of the mind; so that when one thing is signified or expressed, and the same thing not meant, or intended, that is properly a live."

However, Johnson also quoted Isaac Watts's "Logick," which seems to me to give another slant to the word: "The word lie . . . implies both the falsehood of the speech, and my reproach and censure of the speaker." In that sense, lie is an attack word on the speaker who is in error, and is a charge of lack of moral probity in the speaker rather than a specific description of his intent to deceive.

Perhaps that is why, in Merriam-

Webster's Ninth New Collegiate Dictionary, "a charge of lying" is given as one sense of the word, and then in the crucial sense — the "malice" meaning that concerns us here - two different meanings are given: the clear and narrow one of an assertion . . . believed by the speaker to be untrue with intent to deceive" and the looser usage referred to by Boswell: "An untrue or inaccurate statement that may or may not be believed true by the speaker." Other dictionaries, such as Webster's New World and Random House, also stress the first meaning, including intent to de-ceive or mislead, and then add another meaning of "to convey a false impression" without necessarily being criminal or deliberately de-

Where does that leave us? Did "Time lie," as Sharon holds a jury has decided, or did Time not lie, as Time says a jury has decided?

My semantic judgment is this: to most people, although not to all. the word lie embraces the meaning of "deliberate." I think the jury's understanding of the word is the same as put forward by Time and by independent lawyer Abrams: an untruth told with knowledge of its untruthfulness." For savage savants who do not wish to be chilled nor denied the ability to blast public figures, this advice from the poet William Blake

'Lave Moi!': Tales Dirty Cars Tell

Don't Turn Up With Red Dust If You've Told Your Wife

You're Going to Black Loam Country

By Iver Peterson New York Times Service

ENVER - There is a story going around town concerning a local woman who never thought twice about her husband's long business trips until he returned from what he said was a visit to Lincoln, Nebraska, with a thin coat of red clay on his car.

In Denver, even an unsuspecting spouse knows that red dust is not associated with the black loam of corn country. And it takes only a brief inquiry to learn that such a coat is the badge of a visit to southern Utah, a place of gorgeous views and discreet motels where, it developed, the traveling man had been enjoying a respite with another woman.

The dirt on a car can rub off in more ways than one. Along with bumper stickers, travel decals the back-seat clutter that usually betokens children in the family, automotive dirt offers the observant passerby a clue to the home, job or even the character of

The outward language of automobiles is not confined to the West, of course, In New York City, mangled or amputated bumpers and fenders reveal the veteran of alternate-side-of-thestreet parking wars. Mere owner-ship of a Volvo or of a Saab speaks volumes.

But in the West mud has special meanings and qualities. The region is growing rapidly, for one thing, and rapid growth means muddy streets lined with $300,000 houses, it means acres of torn-up prairie waiting to be planted with a neo-Cotswolds cottage development and, for many people, the chance to live on a ranch within sight of the city. All those phenomena produce cars easily identifiable by the mud they bear. High Plains mud. when soft, has the adhering quali-

Instead, they use heavy applications of a sand that seems to include a high proportion of stones. Not surprisingly, people here have learned to live with dirt on their cars, even to cherish it and appreciate its finer distinctions. For example, oil drilling in-volves something called "drilling mud." a combination of rock dust produced by the turning drill and water pumped in and out of the hole to cool the bit and bring the mud to the surface.

But the most common form of automotive dirt is the coating on the thousands of cars that shuttle daily into the city from the growing outer suburbs. Getting the roads paved in these districts requires that all homeowners agree to form a special improvement district and absorb the cost of their asphalt in higher taxes. That means there are always POHNPEI. Micronesia When the Nahnmwarki of Uh comes calling, the giant crabs are in the pot. and the perfume of the ilang-ilang creeps over their hilltop home. Bob and Patti Arthur know they have found that "better way" they were looking for.

"It's not easy but it's nice," he says. No, she says, "it's paradise." For 14 years, these ex-Californians have lived out a fantasy that Walter Mittys only dream, setting up house and holding court on a little South Seas isle.

They are a jet-age Swiss Family Robinson, slicing through thick jungle and mastering village poli-tics, dining by flashlight and splashing through tropical down-pours, bringing up their boys in a world of sharks, stingrays and island beauties.

Through it all the transplanted Americans have mellowed into middle age and become skilled hotelkeepers, making their remote hilltop Village a favored way-sta-tion for Pacific travelers.

Patti Arthur explained it to a visitor this way: "We were set — a house on the beach near Los Angeles, two cars, an airplane, a boal. But we just thought there must be a better way of doing things."

And a better place. Pohnpei.

ing in the western Pacific 3,000 miles southwest of Hawaii, is a place of misty volcanic mountains and rainbow-touched lagoons, the kind of island whose flowery scent cles deterioriate quickly in the sometimes reaches scafarers long salty, humid air. before its peaks rise into view.

"It was love at first sight," Bob Arthur recalled of his first landing here aboard a scaplane in 1970. Actually, the Arthurs' quest had begun two years earlier, when he gave up his job as a successful Los Angeles product designer and, with land of Roatán to try to make a go of shark-fishing with a friend. Bob was 37, Patti 31. But Roatan life was limited and sharks "not that lucrative," Bob said. He went island-hopping in the Pacific in search of a new home.

He discovered that Pohnpei, one of the Micronesian islands controlled by the United States as a UN trust territory, needed a hotel. "He talked me into this nutty idea," said Patti. "I said, "We don't know anything about hotels," and he said, "That's the beauty of it!" He found the ideal site - the spine of a hill that juts out into Pohnper's turquoise logoon, a half-hour ride up a muddy dirt road from Kolonia, the island's tiny cen-

It took six years to open The Village, during which the Arthurs had to win over local landowners and island leaders to the idea, raise capital, and then oversee construction of 21 ilmms, the thatched-roof, hillside bungalows that make up their hotel.

The Nahamwarki of Uh, traditional potentate of the local Pohnpeian clans, sat on their first board of directors. And by 1983 an international travel newsletter had chosen their Village as one of its "Hideaways of the Year."

The Arthurs, their children, a 150-pound Irish wolfhound and a pride of housecats live in two large ihmws atop the hill.

The setting is Eden-like bright-colored lorikects fly among breadfruit trees, the ilang-ilang and other tropical blossoms scent the pathways, the sun sets spectacularly beyond Sokehs Rock, Pohnpel's Life in paradise can be inconvenient. Patti must plan meals three months in advance - except for plate-sized mangrove crabs and a few other local products, food comes by ship from the United States. Power outages are regular; Their eldest sons, Peter, 24, and

James, 20, grew up as island boys, swimming in stingray-infested mangrove swamps, learning to spot fish and speak Pohnpeian, and in the end marrying island girls.

Peter now is building a thatchand-wood house nearby for his new his wife and three small children, family. James and his wife live on moved south to the Honduran isdaughter and 16-year-old adopted son work and study in Hawaii, planning eventually to come home to Pohnpei. in 14 years, the Arthurs have
